Thai Pusam in Grand Style

---

A seven-mile procession on January 27, 2002, from downtown Kuala Lumpur to the famed Batu Caves temple marked the beginning of Malaysia's famous Hindu festival of Thai Pusam. About seven percent of the country's 22 million people are ethnic Indians, most of whom are Hindus. This year more than one million Hindu devotees celebrated Thai Pusam at Batu Caves alone. They were joined by 100,000 visitors and tourists from a multitude of religions.

The Maitreya Buddha

It was in Bodhgaya in the Bihar State of North India that Gautama Buddha attained enlightenment under the Bodhi Tree 2,500 years ago. He was the fourth incarnation of Buddha and gave the world the Buddhist religion as we know it today. Now, to honor the coming of Buddha's fifth incarnation, a 500-foot statue of the expected Maitreya Buddha of loving kindness, destined to bring worldwide peace, is being erected in Bodhgaya.

The statue and its ancillary buildings, set in a park, are expected to be completed in 2005 at a cost of <sup>US</sup>$195 million. Designed to last a 1,000 years, the statue will be a sculpted building constructed of steel and bronze. Its internals will accommodate prayer halls, shrines, religious art galleries and more.

Flying Veggie Rations

Tens of thousands of food packets were dropped over Afghanistan during a war-time relief effort initiated by the United States shortly after the terrorist attacks on the twin towers of New York. These "Humanitarian Daily Rations" (HDR) were unique because they were completely vegetarian. Going veggie was the only way a team of cultural and nutritional experts could figure to accommodate the varied food restrictions of all the world's religions. Requiring quite a bit of dietary flexibility for some recipients, each packet provides about 2,200 calories and consists of a day's ration of red beans, rice, fruit bars, peanut butter and strawberry jam. The US had some two million of these power packets stockpiled.

A Swami's Magic

Swami Suddhananda works and travels tirelessly to bring the comprehensive spirituality of Vedanta to a variety of forums. He has become popular for his personal development seminars at universities and management associations in Indian and the US. The youth like him, too. During a three-week tour of New Zealand last year, he left adult audiences spell-bound, but the crowning feature of that trip was a youth camp that attracted 75 youths. Swami resides in Chennai at the Samvit Ashram, home of the Suddhananda Foundation for Self knowledge.

Abuse Scandal Roils Catholic Church

Hundreds of thousands of Hindu children in India are enrolled every year in Catholic schools by parents who assume such education is the best and most disciplined available. Today, however, shocking revelations in the USA indicate parents of those children should be concerned. In February, the Rev. John J. Geoghan, age 66, a Catholic priest with a long history of pedophilia, was sentenced in Boston to ten years in prison for child molestation. Geoghan's case only showcased the slowly growing exposure of perhaps the Church's greatest secret: the sexual abuse of minors by some of its priesthood. The Linkup, a Chicago-based organization for victims of clerical sexual abuse, claims the Church has paid out at least $800 million since the 1980s to quell sexual scandals associated with its priests. According to a report from the Boston Globe, Geoghan alone has cost the Church ten million dollars in the settlement of some 50 child molestation cases over the past 30 years. During the investigation of Geoghan, 80 more priests were exposed on charges of sexually abusing children over the past 40 years in that one diocese alone. (There are 194 dioceses in the USA.) Even now, as Hinduism Today goes to press, a bishop in Florida, Rev. Anthony J. O'Connell, has just resigned because of past sexual abuse. His predecessor, Rev. J. Keith Symons, was the first bishop in the USA to relinquish his position for sexual molestation of children. Catholic leaders worry that this escalating sexual fiasco may all but ruin their fragile future. Since the 1960s, applicants for the Catholic priesthood have declined sharply.

Wartime Worship

Even the agony of war cannot stop multi-religious worship in bomb-ravaged Kabul, Afghanistan. At five ruined houses in the Afghan capital, 520 devout souls comprising 40 Sikh and 10

Hindu families continue to seek spiritual solace in communal worship. Although Sikhs and Hindus have always enjoyed a friendly relationship in India, here in Afghanistan they are further bound through the ravages of war by their common language, a need for worship and a primal sense of security born of human togetherness. Once prosperous merchants, bankers, moneylenders and currency exchangers, they were uprooted from their homes and occupations in the early 90s as ruling Muslims reacted to the Hindu attack on the Babri Masjid in north India. When the Taliban came into power in 1996 and exerted oppressive controls, the Hindus and Sikhs kept secretly praying. Finally, in December of 2001, the government officially assured them they were a part of the Afghan family. Many of the 50,000 who fled the country want to return and are watching carefully as the tenuous situation ebbs and flows.

Sri Rudram in Atlanta

---

Devotees attending the

---

Hindu temple of Atlanta in Georgia are still talking about the Sri Maha Rudra Yagnam they held from August 31 to September 3, in 2001. During that powerful event, Sri Rudram, a much-revered propitiatory hymn to Lord Siva from the Yajur Veda, was chanted in unison 1,331 times. The ritual fire ceremony continued for four days without a break from four in the morning to ten at night.

The Decalogue of Assisi

In Assisi, Italy, during January, 2002, Pope John Paul III presided over The Day of Prayer for Peace in the World. At the conclusion of the event, His Holiness released a decalogue of ten sanctified perceptions centering on a theme of world peace through world harmony. But twelve religions did not represent the kind of balance in numbers one might expect in a gathering espousing a spirit of brotherhood among peers. Of the 252 representatives present, 100 were Christian (including 49 Cardinals), only six were Hindu, and three religions had just one representative each.

Om Schooling

School teachers in San Francisco say yoga classes featuring postures and breath control exercises are working wonders to calm kids and keep them focused. Utilized in a half-dozen elementary and high schools in the Bay Area, the program has come to be known as "Om Schooling," a take off on Home Schooling. Officially called ABC Yoga, it was originally developed by respected yoga teacher Tony Sanchez to help kids with asthma. While being careful not to discuss yoga's religious aspects, teachers explore its history and incorporate it into lessons on physics, anatomy and geometry.

"Yoga allows kids to become more aware and to grow into healthier adults," says Sanchez.
